Clarence Coleman Takes a Big Trip And Tells About It.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Aug. 13.—This is my first visit to Milwaukee—also to the Badger State. It is not often I make a pilgrimage to the North, preferring to spend my vacation days in Dixie Land. However, the cheapest excursion of the season attracted my attention and I came up from Louisville to Benton Harbor, Mich., Tuesday over the C. C. C. & St. L. (Big Four) now operated by the New York Central lines. The State of Indiana was traversed its entire length, North and South, and we came through the banner corn and wheat section of the Hoosier State. The wheat crop just threshed was an average one, while the corn yield will prove a bumper one; in fact all Central and Northern Indiana appear to be one immense field of maize. We came through the progressive little cities of Anderson, Alexandria and Marion, once the center of the great gas belt. Elkhart, the metropolis of Northern Indiana, is a leading manufacturing and railroad center. At Goshen, Ind., we halted for the "Twentieth Century Limited," en route from Chicago to New York, to pass. This train, which operates over the tracks of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern and New York Central, had left Chicago at noon and was due at New York at 6 A. M. Just think of it—18 hours from the Windy City to Gotham, while down in Louisville we count on 26 hours to New York on the mails, and that schedule is not guaranteed. The "Twentieth Century Limited" is run on a guaranteed 18-hour schedule and the passengers are refunded a certain sum for every hour they are late. Only last week while running late, and in a successful effort to regain lost time, this train made 133 miles in 108 minutes with two brief stops.

Southern Michigan is the fruit and grape vineyard of the Middle West. Peaches, pears, apples and grapes are grown in abundance. Benton Harbor and St. Joseph, twin cities, and located on Lake Michigan, are separated by the beautiful St. Joseph river, one of the most picturesque and winding streams in America. The population of Benton Harbor is about 120,000, that of St. Joseph, 70,000. Steamers ply between the twin cities and Chicago and other lake ports. I stopped over night in Benton Harbor, boarding the steamer, City of Chicago, at 7:30 A. M. at St. Joseph, for Chicago. The lake was choppy, otherwise the voyage from the Michigan town to the Windy City was uneventful, though quite a number of the passengers were disposed to feed the finny tribe—just for their "stomach's sake."

This was my first visit to Chicago since July 1901, eight years ago last month. While on my return from the Philippines I stopped over a few days. I was not sufficiently familiar with this great Western metropolis to mark any changes. Greater Chicago, with its 225 square miles, larger than some of our Kentucky counties, and with a population larger than that of any of our Southern States except Texas, constitutes a place too large for the casual visitor to absorb in a few days. Chicago, second only to New York among American cities, is probably third among the cities of the world in population. According to a conservative estimate, based on the 1909 city directory, the city has a population in excess of 2,225,000, or something like 2,600,000 more than Louisville—and not a few of us think the Kentucky town is a real city. While in Chicago I took a 40-mile auto tour, traversing several blocks of the down-town business district, thence down the beautiful Michigan Boulevard; visited Jackson, Washington and Grant parks, and many other points of interest. Saw the million-dollar residences of John W. Gates and of Armour, the great meat packer; also the great Field museum, University of Chicago and last but not least, the home of one of America's greatest mail order firms—Montgomery, Ward & Co. I went through the Chicago postoffice, being shown through by Mr. Edward B. Goltra, president of the National Association of Postoffice Clerks, which is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. The writer has been a member of this association for two years. One sees so much in a city of the magnitude of Chicago that it is a waste of time to attempt a description of it on paper.

Yesterday at 9:30 A. M. I boarded the steamer Christopher Columbus, which put us in Milwaukee six hours later. Enroute we sighted Evanston, Ill., Keneshaw and Racine, Wis. The latter is quite a city and is the home of Horlick's Malted Milk and the J. I. Case Threshing Machine Co. I am quite sure these names are familiar to a majority of the readers of the I. J.

Milwaukee, with a population of about 400,000, is one of the prettiest and cleanest cities I have ever seen. Located on Lake Michigan, it has one of the best harbors of the lake ports. Steamers come up Milwaukee river to the central business districts of town, the same as they make the Chicago river docks in Chicago.

Wisconsin, the home State of the eloquent Senator LaFollette, is as strongly republican as the "Bloody Eleventh" in Kentucky. However, it has been carried democratic by Peck, who was twice elected to fill the executive chair at Madison. Your readers are probably familiar with this great man through his humorous literary productions, especially "Peck's Bad Boy," which has furnished innocent amusement to millions of children and grown people alike. His "Peck's Sun," a weekly publication, had a world wide circulation in its day.

I have been through the Milwaukee postoffice, and it is a beauty. When it comes to light and cleanliness it has them all beaten. The secretary of our National organization, George Pfeiffer, is a clerk in the city division of the Milwaukee postoffice.

This is a city of parks and monuments—her parks ranking second to none in beauty; and as a manufacturing city it takes first rank, population considered. I went through the great Schlitz and Pabst breweries, the former the largest in the world, the latter contesting with the Anheuser-Busch Co., of St. Louis, for second place. These two breweries are of such gigantic proportions that I shall not attempt to go into details. The dozen or more breweries of Louisville would be completely enveloped by the great Schlitz plant. These two breweries give employment to several thousand men, women and children. Their bottled beers are sold in every civilized corner of the globe, and only last week the Pabst people shipped 1,000 casks of their Blue Ribbon to Manila. These firms maintain large warehouses and distributing stations in all of the large cities of Europe, Africa and the Orient, as well as throughout Mexico, Canada, South America and the United States. "Schlitz, the beer that made Milwaukee famous," form a combination of words familiar to almost every American, but one can not conceive of the magnitude of this concern without a visit through its plant.

Milwaukee with her 200,000 German and 100,000 Scandinavian population, 30 breweries and 2,000 saloons, will be slow to jump aboard the water wagon, so popular now in the South and parts of the Middle West.

This city has just had a "Home Coming" celebration, modeled after the Kentucky Home Coming three years ago in Louisville. The wanderers by the thousands besieged the Cream City for four days.

But I must ring off. Leave here at 4:30 P. M. for Chicago, thence home by way of Benton Harbor. I am accompanied on this trip by a brother post-office clerk and my wife. My brother-in-law, W. B. Adams, a young druggist of Louisville, was unavoidably detained from making this trip.

These cool nights and exhilarating lake breezes are mighty nice, but for me, Oh you Dixie.

Success to the I. J.
